Another successful trip on the nostalgia train. My friends and I spent many a quarter doing coin-op co-op in the arcade playing Buster Bros., and popping bubbles to save the world is as fun as ever.

I have to say though, it is definitely a different feel. I don't remember the pace of Buster Bros. being as frantic and unforgiving as this game, but then again, the quarter-munching arcade machine didn't give infinite lives or instant replay either. So though I died a lot - and I mean A LOT - very rarely did I find the bubble swarm to be difficult to the point of frustration. The timer on the other hand...I do have to complain that the time limits are brutally harsh on some levels, preventing me from taking a calm and calculated approach and instead forcing me to throw away life after life after (fortunately unlimited) life just trying to button mash and fluke dodge my way through. Which I guess was the point...and I did clear the world tour, with my less than optimal bullet-hell skills, so maybe I'm focusing too much on it.

All in all, a fun and simple little game that I'm glad I picked up, and will probably play one-off games of well into the future. Do check the discussion boards though - while I played solo with no plan or hope of reaching 100% completion, so these issues never bothered me, there are a lot of complaints (and I think valid) about how some achievements are impossible due to bugs, and that online co-op is locked until you clear the world tour. Keep that in mind if looking to play with friends and/or achievement hunt.

Classic arcade fun without the classic arcade quarter drain. Enjoy!. Fantastic "reboot"

Played alot of Pang on my Amiga 500 when i was a kid. Now i got quite a Super Nintendo collection, including Super Pang, wich reminds of this. This freshly made Pang game with new modes, feels really good and will work for you if you love the series.

Controller recommended. Works perfect with a XBox One pad.
